

The “Retail Recession” Label Does Not Fit

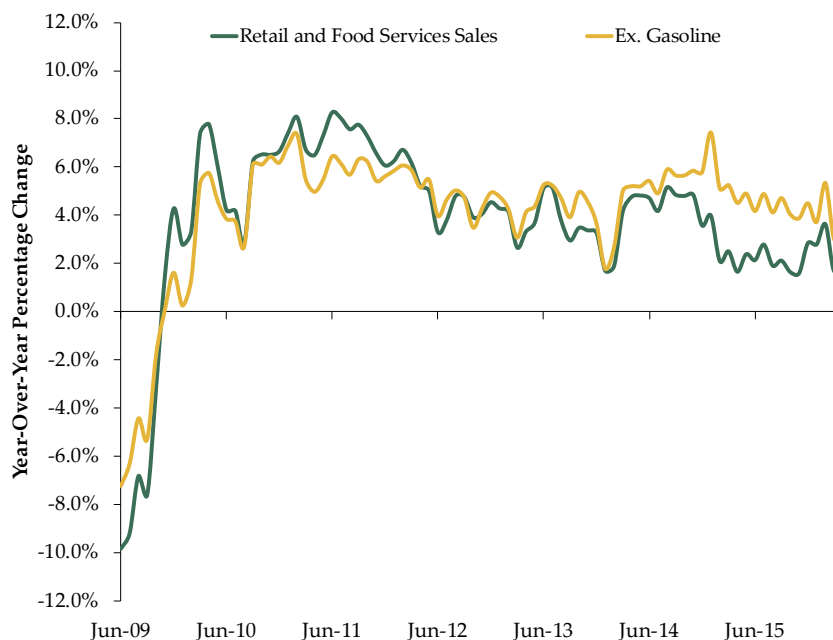

FISHER INVESTMENTS EUROPE™

In the Q1 2016 earnings season, some department stores reported weaker-than-expected results with news of declining sales and profits. Media was quick to dramatise the reports with cries of a US “retail recession” and assertions that the consumer is tapped out—all bad signs for US growth looking forward. However, we would humbly suggest that is incorrect. A recession is a broad-based decline in economic output. The narrative painted by the media is more akin to narrow, virtually anecdotal data points and a shift in shopping habits—away from department stores and towards online and specialty retailers. Despite some retailers’ recent difficulties, there is ample evidence that US consumers are in solid shape, and that the economy is not headed for recession anytime in the foreseeable future.

On 11 May 2016, Macy’s reported Q1 sales fell over -7% y/y while earnings tumbled -29% y/y. The following day, Kohl’s said Q1 year-over-year revenues fell more than expected and earnings slid -50%. The negativity continued after market close on Thursday when Nordstrom reported Q1 earnings contracted -61% y/y, badly missing estimates (though sales grew about 1%). All lowered their guidance for full 2016 results. Friday of that week, JC Penney joined the retail decline, also posting poor results.

In the perspective of the media, this is an indication of consumers materially tightening their belts. And, with consumer spending accounting for roughly 70% of US GDP, the media suggest it signals a weak economy—and maybe an approaching recession. That narrative, however, is only based on a select sample size of companies, and seems quite unfitting when put into perspective against broader, more-indicative economic data like US retail sales. April’s data beat estimates with 1.3% m/m growth (3.0% y/y). As Exhibit 1 shows, this is not a new trend—retail sales are growing at a fine clip, which is especially clear when you remove the negative influence of falling gas prices by excluding gas station sales. (Which reversed in March and April.)

Within the retail data are clues to identifying the root of these big retailers’ earnings issues—and it is not due to overstretched consumers at all. It is in part just competition from newer, specialty retailers. However, more significantly, nonstore retailing—a technical term covering internet and catalog retailers—has vastly outgrown brick-and-mortar sales throughout this expansion. Exhibit 2 shows the growth in retail sales in goods (which excludes food services sales), nonstore sales and goods sales ex. nonstore sales since the 2007-2009 recession ended.

As you might expect after viewing Exhibit 2, S&P 500 internet and catalog retailers’ profit growth has been quick. In the last three quarters, earnings have grown 143.0% y/y, 30.2% and 58.0%. A trend that has been occurring for years, mainly due to the convenience of shopping online as opposed to trekking out to a physical brick-and-mortar location. When consumers do venture out to physical locations, long-term trends show they are increasingly less inclined to shop at big department stores. (Exhibit 3)

Exhibit 3: Declining Department Store Sales Is a Long-Term Trend

So why are so many fretting faltering brick-and-mortar store sales now? It’s likely a manifestation of recent widespread recession fears.

Yet these fears are unfounded. It is true US GDP growth slowed to 0.5% annualised in Q1, stoking weak economy fears. People erroneously equate these fears to the US nearing recession as they extrapolate the slowdown into the future, but that is not how economies work. Growth rates typically fluctuate throughout expansions, and there is little evidence Q1’s slow growth is an indication of worse to come. In this very expansion, growth has slowed or briefly contracted a handful of times, yet these periods did not foreshadow a recession. (Exhibit 4)

Exhibit 4: Slowing GDP Doesn’t Necessarily Mean Recession Ahead

Forward-looking economic data does not suggest weakness looms. Loan availability is a key driver of economic growth—hence why tight credit conditions often precede recessions. Yet today, lending is growing nicely and the yield curve spread—long term rates minus short-term—is positive. Banks typically borrow short term (deposit accounts, overnight funding, etc.) and lend long term, so long rates exceeding short indicates profitable lending. Profitable lending stimulates loan growth, providing capital businesses need to grow. This is one reason why The Conference Board’s Leading Economic Index remains high and rising, and in its nearly 60-year history a recession has never occurred while this has been the case.

Moreover, falling consumer spending tends to result from economic downturns, not spur them. Most spending is for housing, food, utilities, transportation, and basic household goods—forms of necessities people have little flexibility to cut spending on. Of course, when the economy turns down consumers tend to spend less on luxuries such as vacations and other non-necessities, but that is not the observations seen in the current environment. The S&P 500’s Hotels, Restaurants & Leisure industry’s earnings grew over 13% y/y in Q1—despite a -122% drop at one trendy Mexican food restaurant that had some widely known issues with food poisoning. This highlights another reason investors should not fret this week’s weak retailer results: Spending on goods is just one component of overall spending. Services accounts for the majority of the total. In any case, the biggest driver of consumption growth is real disposable income, which is growing quite nicely these days (Exhibit 5).

Exhibit 5: Disposable Income is Rising

So by factoring in the broader economic data, it is clear to see that there is no sign US consumer spending is on shaky foundations. Despite the media’s take on a handful of brick-and-mortar retailers posting bad earnings, the reality is far from the false label “retail recession”. As average consumers shift towards online and specialty retailers, investors must practice prudence and contrast the anecdotal data points against the broader economic data – a matter of viewing the whole picture, not just the frame.

7. Custody and Execution

Neither Fisher Investments Europe nor Fisher Investments is authorised to hold client money. This means neither Fisher Investments Europe nor Fisher Investments can accept cheques made out to Fisher in respect of investments, nor can they handle cash. All client assets are held at external custodians where each client has a direct account in their own name. If you appoint Fisher Investments Europe or Fisher Investments as your discretionary asset manager, execution of transactions will be arranged through such custodians and brokers and at such prices and commissions that Fisher Investments determines in good faith to be in your best interests. Further information regarding selection of brokers is set out in Fisher Investments' Form ADV Part 2.

8. Risks

Investments in securities present numerous risks, including various market, currency, economic, political, business and other risks, and can be very volatile. Investing in securities can result in a loss, including a loss of principal. Using leverage to purchase and maintain larger security positions will increase exposure to market volatility and is not recommended.

9. Data Protection

To advise you on financial matters, Fisher Investments Europe may collect personal and sensitive information subject to the Data Protection Act 1998. By engaging in business with Fisher Investments Europe, you consent to Fisher Investments Europe processing your data, both manually and electronically, including transferring data outside the European Economic Area, including to its parent, Fisher Investments, in the United States, for the purposes of providing services and enabling Fisher Investments to provide services, maintaining records, analysing your financial situation, providing information to regulatory bodies and service providers assisting Fisher Investments Europe and/or Fisher Investments in providing services.

10. Conflicts of Interest

Fisher Investments Europe has a conflicts of interest policy to identify, manage and disclose conflicts of interest Fisher Investments Europe, Fisher Investments or any of their employees or representatives may have with a client of Fisher Investments Europe, or that may exist between two clients of Fisher Investments Europe. Fisher Investments Europe's conflicts of interest policy covers gifts and favours, outside employment, client privacy, inadvertent custody, marketing and sales activities, recommendations and advice, and portfolio management. In addition, Fisher Investments Europe provides a copy of Fisher Investments' Form ADV Parts 2A and 2B to all clients.

11. Fees

If you appoint Fisher Investments Europe as your discretionary investment manager, you will pay management fees to Fisher Investments Europe as detailed in the investment management agreement. Fisher Investments Europe will pay a portion of such management fees to Fisher Investments as the sub-manager. If you appoint Fisher Investments directly as your discretionary investment manager, you will pay management fees directly to Fisher Investments as detailed in the investment management agreement. If you invest in a UCITS fund managed by Fisher Investments, Fisher Investments will receive its management fee indirectly through the UCITS. Fisher Investments Europe does not charge a separate fee for its introducing or distribution services. You will also incur transaction and custody fees charged by brokers and custodians. However, any such additional fees will be payable directly to brokers/custodians, and neither Fisher Investments Europe nor Fisher Investments will share in any commission or other remuneration.

12. Termination

If you wish to cease using the services of Fisher Investments Europe or Fisher Investments at any time, then send notification and the arrangement will cease in accordance with the investment management agreement. However, if a transaction is in the middle of being arranged on your behalf at that time and it is too late to unwind it, then the transaction may need to be completed first.

13. Governing Law

These Terms of Business are governed by English law.
